We know how important it is that people who work with children are able to recognise the signs of abuse and are then clear about the appropriate procedures to follow. Lunchtime supervisors often work closely with children and so may be in the “front line” in detecting abuse. They are also likely to ‘slip through the net’ when it comes to training. This package is specifically designed to enable support staff to develop knowledge and practice.

Aims of the course are to enable participants to:

- Recognise the signs of child abuse
- Know how to respond to suspicions or disclosures
- Be clear about school policy and procedures
- Examine roles and responsibilities
- Explore appropriate conduct at work to avoid false accusations

Cost is £250.00 per two and a half hours training.

I have extensive experience of working with Lunchtime staff and delivering Safeguarding children training. I have worked as a social worker and as a trainer at ChildLine. I have trained in a large number of schools and have written extensively about school lunchtimes.
